Terunobu Fujimori is a celebrated Japanese architect, historian, and designer known for blending contemporary forms with traditional craftsmanship and natural materials. After beginning his career as an architectural historian, he gained international recognition in the 1990s for imaginative, often playful works such as the Too-High Teahouse (Takasugi-an), the Lamune Onsen complex, and La Collina in Shiga. His projects combine charred wood, earth, copper, and greenery, creating buildings that are at once poetic, tactile, and rooted in Japanese culture, offering a fresh perspective on how architecture can harmonize with history and landscape.
