“Time is money” has long been the mantra of capitalism, but what do we get if we look closely at the time side of this equation? This talk will do just that, focusing on how contemporary theorizations of time – Joseph Vogl’s understanding of “tarrying,” Jenny Odell’s efforts to “do nothing,” and Francois Jullien’s focus on boredom – affect architectural education and practice.